A Frenchman's Own Story

Pride, says the proverb, goeth before a fall. Because we Americans are traditionally proud and cock-sure of ourselves, and because many of our high leaders talk too much about Europe and then have to eat their words, I think every American citizen ought to be compelled to read the series of fact-articles "What Happened to France" which is starting in the August 24th issue of Collier's magazine.

The story of France's collapse is written by Andre Maurois, famed biographer and historian who knew intimately the men who ran things in his native land.

Says Collier's magazine about M. Maurois:

"Painful though it is for a Frenchman to recall events that have brought such terrible consequences to his country, he considers the truth, which he is trying to set forth, less harmful than certain unfounded stories that have gained currency."

I have read M. Maurois' first article, in an advance copy of Collier's for the 24th, and one paragraph is striking:

"In 1936 the situation became even worse. Sit-down strikes in the factories, lack of energy on the part of the government, the red tape of bureaucracy and the unreasonable demands of the committees on procurement reduced French production almost to zero. During the year 1937 THE NUMBER OF AIRPLANES PRODUCED EACH MONTH BY FRENCH FACTORIES FELL TO THE ALMOST UNBELIEVABLE FIGURE OF 38 — AT A TIME WHEN THE MONTHLY PRODUCTION IN GERMANY WAS EXCEEDING 1,000 PLANES."

Refunding Is Believed Dead

Bailey Not Likely to Fight for His Own Bill

The measure, passage of which was termed by the governor as one of his proudest achievements, was made inoperative by opponents when they filed referendum petitions to place it on the general election ballot.

The executive contended that the act would permit his administration to refund the obligations at a lower interest rate and spread out payments that could be met in "an orderly fashion," thus preventing a default in 1949 when much of the principal falls due.

Speculation centered around the question of whether the governor, in view of the primary result, will fight for adoption of the measure. Some expressed the view that, since Homer M. Adkins, the Democratic nominee, denounced the act in his campaign speeches, there was little chance of its passage in November.

Governor Bailey could not be reached for a statement upon his plans. Several state officials were of the opinion, expressed privately, that it would be illogical for the administration to wage a campaign for adoption of the act in view of the election's outcome.

Scout Rally in Hope for 6 Counties

Parade Is Followed by Luncheon and Court of Honor

The greatest Boy Scout rally in the history of southwest Arkansas got underway at 10 o'clock Thursday morning when Scouts from six counties, preceded by a Hope fire truck and the Hope High School Band, paraded through the downtown streets.

Scouts, scoutmasters and assistant scoutmasters from Howard, Lafayette, Little River, Nevada, Sevier and Hempstead counties were on hand to take part in the rally.

After the parade he scouts were taken to the University of Arkansas Experiment Station two miles from Hope where they were guests of the Hope Scouts at a luncheon. The luncheon was followed with a watermelon feast.

In the afternoon a court of honor was held for all those that brought proper credentials from their troop officials.

Many games and contests were played during the afternoon. Demonstrations of skilful arts learned by scouts, such as fire by friction, fire by flint, fire by steel, signaling, knot tying and first aid, were given.

Arms Delay Is Eliminated

Contracts Signed for 700 Training Planes

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Difficulties which delayed the signing of contracts for 4,200 army warplanes were reported virtually surmounted Wednesday while in another field of national defense—the navy—Secretary Knox said that four new destroyers were being completed ahead of schedule.

Knox also revealed plans to increase several-fold facilities for primary training of naval fliers. Besides creating new naval reserve aviation bases at New Orleans, Dallas will be expanded at 13 existing reserve bases. Each base will have a capacity of 100 fledgling fliers, he said, compared with the present average of 15 to 20.

William S. Knudsen, defense commissioner, submitted a memorandum to congress saying that an army of 2,000,00 could be put in the field fully equipped by October 1, 1943. He said the existing army program, calling for complete equipment for 1,200,000 men and procurement of critical non-commercial items for 800,000, would be completed by the end of 1942. Knudsen submitted his memo in response to inquiries.

The War Department announced late Wednesday that a $11,335,631 contract for about 700 training airplanes and spare parts had been signed with North American Aviation Inc., Inglewood, Cal. Delivery dates were not disclosed.

More than a dozen other manufacturers have agreed tentatively to sign provisional contracts, without waiting for congress to approve legislation designed to clear away uncertainty over taxes and profits, it was reported.

Clear Cudahy of Reprimand

Ambassador to Belgium Freed of Criticism

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Ambassador John Cudahy gained vindication from both President Roosevelt and the state department Wednesday night in a controversy over an un-authorized press interview he gave in London concerning conditions in Belgium.

After a long talk with the president, Cudahy, ambassador to Belgium, said he had been authorized to say "that I received no rebuke and none was intended."

The national death rate from tuberculosis in 1939 was 46.6 in 100,000, compared to 48.9 in 1938.

German airplane factories have an estimated production of 60 planes per day.

Here's How Huey's Old Pal Helped Wipe Out Remnants ot the Louisiana Machine

Jimmy Noe's Aid Won for Gov. Sam Jones

Candidate Was Amateur, But Noe Knew the Political Ropes

This is the fourth of five articles on the return of political decency to Louisiana.

By BRUCE CATTON
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

NEW ORLEANS — One of the strangest things about the whole strange story of the downfall of the Long machine here is the fact that Gov. Sam Jones would not have won if he had not had the warm support of a man who was once one of Huey Long's closest friends and staunchest supporters.

That man is State Senator Jimmy Noe, a rollicking, jovial, hard-working and hard-playing politician who makes a bizarre but effective teammate for the idealistic governor.

For a long time it has been Noe's dearest ambition to be governor of Louisiana. He actually was governor as a matter of fact, briefly, stepping up from the lieutenant-governorship during one of the reshuffles of the old Long high command;; but what he craved was a full elective term.

Huey denied it to him, first, declaring brutally that he was never going to let another man who was not a lawyer become governor—largely on the ground that only a man familiar with law could keep stepping the way a Huey Long governor had to step with out getting his foot in it.

Jones was the second man who denied it to him, nosing him out in the first primary of the gubernatorial race this year, after Noe had started the Long machine on the skids. But Noe swung arouind and gave Jones precsely the canny, hard-hitting aid he needed.

Noe Laughed, Joined Up

Noe came around at least partly because a young business man in Jones' entourage had the good judgment to go in and talk turkey to him at a time when Noe was extremely sore at whole Jones crowd. This was just after the first primary, when the bitterness of defeat still rankled.

The businessman was W. Prescott Foster, wealthy sugar planter who has since become Jones' highway commissioner. Foster and other of the Jones strategists were considering the situation; obviously, they had to get Noe to declare for Jones, and work for him, if Jones was to have any chance in the final or run-off primary.

"Let's go over and see Noe," said Foster, at last. "He'll be sore and he'll cuss us out, but we'll just have to take it."

They called on Noe that evening, and Foster's prophecy was proved correct. Noe was sore, and he did cuss them out with gestures, pointing out that he had been working to beat the Earl Long crowd for nearly two years, that he had put a great deal of his own money into it, and that if they —Foster Co.—had supported him instead of picking a "political amateur" out of the hat, he would at that moment be governor-elect.

Foster admitted all this was so and that Noe had a right to feel grieved. Then he explained things frankly; Noe had made a lot of money in oil, and Noe had been a higher-up under Huey Long. Plenty of men of whom the same things could be said had recently been indicated by a federal grand jury. The business group which persuaded Jones to run had considered endorsing Noe—and had decided, finally, it just was too risky.

Noe stared at him for a minute; then he burst out with a big laugh, slapped his thigh and said, "Well —maybe you were right, at that." And the deal was made. (Noe, it should be added, came through the whole federal quiz unscathed.)

Job Split Puzzlzes Both

The Jones advisers were not, on the whole, politically experienced. Noe is onto all the tricks; furthermore, he had built up a good political organization. And because he swung into line and played ball right down to the finish line, Jones made a deal with him regarding patronage under the new administration: half the jobs would go to the Jones people and half to the Noe people.

This agreement is proving a headache for both men now, and inability to iron out some of the kinks is responsible for the administration's de-

Kitchens Asks Probe of Vote

Questions Legality of Absentee Congress Vote

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Congressman Kitchens (Dem. Ky.3 trailing man Kitchens (Dem. Ark.) trailing Oren Harris of El Dorado in returns from Tuesday Democratic primary in the Seventh Arkansas Congressional District, said Wednesday that he would ask an investigation of the voting.

Kitchens said he sent J. R. Wilson, El orado attorney, evidence that the absentee ballot law had been violated.

"I requested Mr. Wilson to see that my right be protected," Kitchens said.

"A number of Arkansas people here received from the office of Roy H. Lewis, county clerk at El Dorado, Union county, envelopes containing absentee ballots they had not requested. Under Arkansas law, absentee ballots must be requested in writing. Some of those receiving the ballots were not even residents or poll tax payers of Union county, but of Chicot and Columbia counties."

"Absentee oVtes Regular"

EL DORADO — County Clerk Roy H. Lewis said Wednesday night that "there is no justification for Mr. Kitchens' statement," when informed of the congressman's efforts to investigate the absentee vote.

Harris' Platform

EL DORADO, Ark. —(AP)— Oren Harris, energetic South Arkansas prosecuting attorney, won the Democratic nomination for congressman from the Seventh District on a "stay-out-of-foreign-wars" platform.

Defeating Wade Hampton Kitchens, year-old El Dorado lawyer told constituents during the campaign that he favored an army and navy capable of "protecting our rights and country," but believed "we can and should stay out of foregin wars."

In connection with national defense, Harris advocated legislation against fifth column activities and establishment of a military academy in the South and a naval academy on the west coast.

The nominee also is an advocate of flood control and federal highway construction. He is opposed to federal control of crude oil production.

"I also am for elimination of trade barriers and freight rate discrimination," Harris said. "I believe in equal education by the federal government, old age assistance to the needy, regardless of a state's ability to match funds, and a substantial agricultural program giving farmers adequate price for their products to maintain an equal standard of living."

British Ships Hold Up Italy

Italian Invaders Slow in Advance on Egypt

CAIRO, Egypt —(AP)— British warships have turned their guns on the coast of their protectorate of Samaliland to hold up Italians advancing toward the key port of Berbera, British bastion on the south shore of the Gulf of Aden.

Armored columns and troop concentrations were scattered by salvos from light naval units offshore. British military headquarters reported, and the Fascist offensive was declared to have been stopped well before Bulhar, 40 miles west of Berbera.

(A dispatch to Il Giornale d'Italia, an authoritative Fascist organ in Rome, reported that British fleet at Aden, the Arabian port across the gulf from Berbera, had left there, adding to the already intense movement" in the gulf. This news suggested an intensification of British fleet action against the talians, whose drive against Berbera is to attempt to break British empire communications through the Red sea, concident with an expected general assault on Egypt and the Suez canal.)

By the Associated Press

Sky-cloudin gwaves of Naziz warplanes, estimated to be upwards of 1,000 with a single armada flying in a 30-mile wide formation, stormed the British isles Thursday in maelstorm fierce in new raids.

It apparently was the biggest mass onslaught since Hitler turned on the full violence of aerial might a week ago.

Thursday according to London sources was the "der tag" set by Hitler for the conquest of England.

Spread-eagling the Island Kingdom, on a schedule that read like a tourist's itinerary, the Nazi raiders struck at the great trans-Atlantic shipping port of Southampton, Newcastle, Aberdeen, Scotland and the huge Vickers Armstrong Armament Works at Hepburn.

Taking advantage of Wednesday night's lull of German raids the British struck ferociously with a midnight and dawn shower of bombs on 100 miles of the German held French coast from Calis to Leharve.

"Boom Town" Is Year's Best

For Fans Who Crave Action, Laughs, Romance

By ROBBIN COONS

This is a double-feature all by itself, a lusty melodramatic panorama of wild-catters in the oil fields. It's for fans who crave double-barreled action, salted with laughs, romance and the liberal spice of hokum.

It's friendly-enemy stuff, the pals who can't get along with or without each other. They're Big John Gable and Square John Tracy. They are wild catters, chasing the black gold across country, hitting it rich and hitting it broke, fighting it out wherever they go.

The 1918 boom town of Burkburnett is the opening locale—a crazy mad town where the two Johns seal their friendship by a fall in the mud and a saloon brawl. That's where they "borrow" their drilling equipment from Dealer Frank Morgan, hit salt water, hit the rails for a stake to try again.. That's where the (Colbert) comes looking for her near-fiance Square John, meets Big John and is bowled over—so that Square John, rushing into town to report the well is a gusher, finds them married. That's where he's a good sport about it, until he finds Big John trifling with the dance hall dame, and that's the end of a beautiful friendship —for the time being.

It's a picture with action right up to the end, when Big and Square fight it out in New York's oil market and then with fists. It's a grand, movie-wise movie, with pace and riproaring atmosphere and good sound acting.

Miss Lamarr—Star No. 4—shows up belatedly as the other woman, out to take Big John from Square John. Miss Lamarr, extremely decorative, gives the impression of a filly in too fast company.

"The Lady in Question." Screenplay by Lewis Meltzer from story by Marcel Achard. Directed by Charles Vidor. Principals: Brian Aherne, Rita Hayworth, Glenn ord, Irene Rich, George Coulouris, Evelyn Keyes, Edward Norris, Curt Bois.

This is what happens when a nice old juror at a murder trial in Paris takes the pretty, acquitted defendant into his home—and begins to tell innocent lies about her to his pleasant but puzzled wife (Rich).

Morestan (Aherne is a delightful character, too generous for his bicycle-and-music shop's good, too sympathetic for his own. After the girl (Hayworth) shows up, old Morestan is in hotter water all the time —especially because another juror (Bois) insists on returning to rehash the trial and thus heightens the danger of exposure. When Papa Morestan's daughter (Keyes) learns that her fiance (Norris) is the sort of no-good who'll make love to the lady in question, and his son (Ford) falls in love with her and tries to rob the till for an elopement, Papa begins to believe he was wrong in insisting on acquittal.

HIGHLIGHTS FROM LATEST BOOKS

Burman Brings Mississippi to Life Like Mark Twain

Probably no man knows the Mississippi better than Ben Lucien Burman. Yo ufeel that after reading his unforgettable story of Mississippi life today, "Big River to Cross" (John Day; $3). Here is the mighty river come to life, with shanty boats and roustabouts with show boats and superstitions, with barge lines and big liars. There has been no book on the river so rich, perhaps, since Mark Twain. Take these typical bits which seem to flow as does the stream:

There were colorful steamboatmen in the olden days, characters like the tempestuous Captain Leathers, who, when he saw a passenger whittling at the railing of his finest boat, whipped out a knife and began slashing at the passenger's clothing; and when the passenger remonstrated that the Captain was cutting his coat, replied firecely: "Yes, sir, anm it, sir. You're cutting my boat."

But there are characters to equal him today. There are figures like Captain Barney, who every evening before supper lowers a tin bucket into the muddy river, and, when it is filled, drinks the thick brown fluid until every drop has vanished. "Keeps my health a-going- good," he drawls lazily. "t's this here filtering and all these fancy fixings they do to the water that causes all the sicknesses there is nowadays. Just takes all the strength out of it."

And on the same boat there is Blue Johnny, an engineer noted for his tipplings, who early in the morning goes to his chief and declares: "Captain, give me the orders for everything you want me to do the rest of the day, 'cause I'm going to get drunk in an hour, and then I won't be able to understand 'em." Given the orders, he remembers them in his Bacchanalian depths, and executes each one with faithfulness and precision, a phenomenon which might cause a psychologist to wonder.

WE THE WOMEN

It's Best For Widow to Live Her Own Life

By RUTH MILLETT

The mother of grown children, who refuses to go to live with a son or daughter when her husband dies, is regarded as brave and selfish

Actually she is doing what is best for her as well as what is best for the children.

The woman who gives up her home and moves in with a married son or daughter is really saying good-bye to her life as an active, self-reliant person and becoming a hanger-on.

No matter how hard it is for her to adjust herself to standing on her own two feet, any widow who is not feeble or in poor health should try it.

She should, if possible, find some way to support herself, unless there is enough insurance to take care of her for life. Fo rit will give her a feeling of self-reliance.

She's Smart, Not Noble

She should, if it isn't possible to keep up the home she and her husband had, either get a small apartment alone or share one with another lone woman. It isn't good for a woman who is used to having a kitchen to try to get along in a small bedroom.

She should keep right on seeing her old friends, and making new ones to fill the gaps left by those who will move away or die. In fact, she will probably have more time for friends now than she hus ever had in her life before. She must be careful not to give in to feeling sorry for herself and for her lot in life, or she will drive them from her.

In just a year or two, the widow who goes it alone will find herself far better off, far happier, and much more contented with her place in the world than the widow who takes the easy way out and moves in with a son or daughter.

So let's not call her noble, let's call her smart.

"Sorry, I'm not going—I'll be shopping instead!"

"HIS SPEECH at the club luncheon is going to be about advertising, and I know just what he's going to say. I've read his book.

"He's against advertising....says it adds to the cost of living....that it misleads and deceives the public.

"Tommyrot! Dad's first car cost more than two thousand dollars. Ours cost less than half that much and it's a better car.

"Our first package of corn flakes was fifteen cents. Now we get two bigger packages for fifteen cents and they reach us fresher and crisper.

"Mother wore silk stockings only on Sundays because they cost so much. I wear them every day!

"I think the lecturer is all wet. I wouldn't enjoy his speech. The only ad I ever read that sold me a poor bill of goods was the one about his book."

Venomous books and speeches, in which radical agitators attack advertisers, have been much in fashion these last few years. But the novelty is wearing off and interest wanes as one after another of the attackers figures prominently in the findings of the Dies Committee.

Advertising is not a sinister something to suspect. It is just a part of selling, a proved method of increasing business activity—a condition that we've all been praying for ever since 1930.

It has introduced new luxuries and improved necessities in towns and villages at the same moment as in the great metropolitan centers.

It has played a leading part in lifting home drudgery from the backs of women, putting the nation on wheels, improving our diet, hygiene and appearance. By stimulating mass production it has brought down the cost of the things we buy. It has helped keep our factories busy, our people at work.

Let's cheer advertising on. Help it to give business a lift. What helps advertising helps you.

YESTERDAY: O'Leary questions Dale about Sayler's business and possible enemies, and about the five dinner guests. A window of the study is discovered unlocked. O'Leary finds a release protecting Sayler from a breach of promise action. He summons Hazel Leighton.

CHAPTER IV

WHEN Hazel Leighton walked into the study, it was quite apparent she had completely recovered from the shock of finding Sayler's body. Aloof and self-composed, she stood poised in the doorway for a moment, as if waiting for Lieutenant O'Leary to acknowledge her presence.

The police officer was still seated at Sayler's desk, engrossed in several documents he had spread before him. Lights in the room were coming from a series of lamps along the walls and from the desk lamp. O'Leary finally looked up, and there was the trace of a smile on his face.

"Miss Leighton?" Hazel nodded. "I'm Lieutenant O'Leary. Come over here and sit down, please."

Calmly Hazel walked toward the lieutenant. It was only when she reached the dark, jagged stain in the middle of the room that she hesitated a moment and carefully stepped around it. O'Leary motioned her into a chair that had been placed to the side of the desk, at his right.

"Miss Leighton, I understand it was you who first came upon the body," he said.

She lighted a cigaret. "Yes. It was pretty much of a shock."

"Did you enter this room at all?"

"Not until the others came. I just screamed . . . I couldn't help it. And then I felt weak, so I hung onto the door and stared at the body until Dale and the rest came from the drawing room."

The lieutenant fingered the check he had taken from the desk drawer. "Miss Leighton, did you know that you were to get a $5000 check from Mr. Sayler tonight?"

* * *

FOR a moment, Hazel's eyes faltered, and she tamped out her cigaret with quick, nervous movements of her long, slender fingers. "Why, yes," she said slowly. "Mr. Sayler was a lawyer, you know, and the check was part of a business matter he was handling for me."

"What kind of business?"

"I don't think that matters. It was personal . . . nothing at all to do with—with what happened here tonight."

O'Leary held out a single sheet of paper, clipped to a tan legal jacket. "Did it have anything to do with this?"

"Why, I don't know. I can't—"

"Maybe I ought to tell you what this is," O'Leary interrupted. "It's a release—a release from possible future breach of promise action against Martin Sayler. There's a space down here for you to sign. You won't need to now."

Hazel sat forward in her chair and rested her elbows on the desk. "I can't understand it. I haven't the faintest notion what you mean."

O'Leary looked straight at the blond woman and gestured mildly with a cigar he took from his vest pocket. "Oh, yes, you have, Miss Leighton. I'll tell you what it means. Sayler was going to give you $5000 so you wouldn't sue him. And he was going to make sure that you couldn't sue. Maybe you'd better tell me the rest."

Hazel sat very rigidly, her blond hair glimmering in the glow of the desk lamp. Little spots of angry red rose in her cheeks. "All right, Lieutenant," she said. "I'll tell you. Maybe that's better. Then you won't be getting a lot of ideas about something that isn't so."

O'Leary struck a match and held it to his cigar. "Right. It would be a lot better all around if you told me everything."

"Sayler was one of the lowest persons I ever met," Hazel said. "Funny about that . . . I thought I loved him. He's got a kind of veneer that doesn't show up so badly under the right kind of light. We went together for almost a year. He wanted me to marry him, but I wasn't sure.

"And then, last week, he made me an offer . . . this offer. I was never so insulted in my life. I had known his attitude toward me was changing. But I didn't know what a rotter he was until he told me the wedding was off and offered me $5000 to be a good girl. I slapped his face."

O'Leary leaned back in his swivel chair. "Why were you here tonight, then, Miss Leighton?"

Hazel avoided the officer's eyes. "I don't know. There was something about that man . . . I can't tell you what exactly. He asked me to come, and I knew why he wanted me here. I didn't want to come. I had no intentions of coming. Until tonight . . . and then something just seemed to draw me here. I wish I hadn't now."

"I can understand that," said O'Leary.

* * *

FROM the vestibule doorway, Sergeant Carroll stepped into the room. "Look, Chief," said the Sergeant. "The boys have been doing a little checking, and the medical examiner telephoned. I thought maybe you wanted to know—"

"Go ahead, Sergeant," O'Leary said.

Carroll shrugged. "Okay. Well, first of all, we checked the phone company like you said. They know if any long distance calls were made here tonight. There wasn't any."

O'Leary nodded. "Which means Sayler never reached his desk. He was killed right after he left the others in the drawing room—on his way back to the desk."

Carroll squinted. "Right. And here's what the medical examiner has to say. He made a quick check and he said the bullet hit Sayler from the right, at an angle, and struck his heart. It knocked him off like a building collapsed on him."

"Which means that the shot must have been fired from somewhere near that window . . . right?"

"Right. . . . Only it wasn't—not through the window, anyway."

O'Leary's eyes became quizzical, but he waited for Carroll to continue.

"The boys have been going over the grounds with a comb," the sergeant explained. "There ain't any footprints. The ground is pretty soft outside this window, and if anybody was hanging around there'd be footprints sure. And the window ain't been touched . . . not from the outside. The only way to open that window is with a crowbar or something sharp, unless it's opened from the inside. That'd leave a mark. There isn't any. Maybe the fingerprints we took on the inside will show something."

O'Leary grunted. "They won't show anything. The housekeeper's, Barbour's, Sayler's, a few cops'—they'll be a smear. Anybody who'd try a job like that would be smart enough to wear gloves."

"Yeah, sure," Carroll assented. "We just thought we'd better, though—the old routine."

"The angle of the shot is all wrong for any of the other windows?"

"Right."

"And no shot could have been fired through this window—the one that would give us the right angle?"

"Right again," said Carroll.

"There's only one answer I can see, Sergeant," O'Leary said. "Whoever committed the murder was right here in this house—is probably still here."

WASHINGTON — First repeat performance in the European war is likely to be staged in Finland.

Foreign correspondents have left Helsinki, although communications from that city are not subject to censorship. News of what is happening there comes from German dominated news outlets in Stockholm. More reliable information filters through in official diplomatic communiques.

The Communist party is out-lawed in Helsinki, but recently 400 members of the Soviet League of Peace and Friendship staged a demonstration there, and clamored for union with the U. S. S. R.

Twenty-four hours after the March 13 peace treaty was signed, the Finns began construction of a new Mannerheim line. And Finland's defenses have been strengthened by a flow of supplies from the United States which have been coming in steadily since then.

When the Finns had to fight last winter they were handicapped because orders placed in America in September, 1939, had not been filled.

No Help For Finns

Side by side with her defense preparations, inland has carried out a brave reconstruction program throughout the late spring and summer.

It seems doubtful that Finland is sufficiently rehabilitated, or sufficiently equipped to repel another Russian invasion now.

The numerical odds against her will be about 10 to 1 as they were last December.

What the Finns call "Narva" weather is due soon, and that would Russia's mechanized units will bog weight the odds in their favor.

In the deep snow of early winter down, and the skillful Finish skiers in white uniforms will have the advantage.

Also the ice on Finland's lakes is not thick enough until January and February to bear the weight of war vehicles.

He says Finland has not been properly grateful for Germay's assistance in her fight for independence. That was 23 years ago.

Mrs. Roosevelt's Biography Soon

The first biography of Eleanor Roosevelt will be published on her birthday this year. But that is an accident.

Ruby Black, Washington newspaperwoman and author of the book, was had decided to bring it out on Oct. 11, less than a month before the presidential elections.

On second thought, she decided the publishers were publicity wise to pick Mrs. Roosevelt's birthday, and wrote them a congratulatory note about it.

They answered saying they hadn't known it was Mrs. Roosevelt's birthday. They always publish their books on Friday, and Oct. 11 just happened to be the first Friday open on their schedule.

Bureau of mines researchers have figured out two new processes which will make the United States self-sufficient in manganese. Until the war the United States imported all but 6 per cent of its needs in this essential war material.

The new processes make it possible to make better use of domestic manganese ores containing only 10 per cent of the metal, compared with 50 to 80 per cent in imported ores.

Portugal has been a republic since 1911.

How to Conquer Courteously

The world isn't getting any more decent or any more moral, but it is getting darned sight slicker.

Observe the difference between conqkuest, 1940 model, and conquest in the old bad days.

In the O. B. D. the invading army marched in, beat the defenders, massacred everybody in sight, stole everything removable, and went home ,leav-behind a suitable garrison and an iron-fisted governor.

These matters have been improved upon in our enlightened age. Follow the modern procedure:

The invading army marches in, beats the defenders. So far it is all the same. But now it changes. Nobody is massacred. Nothing is stolen. The occupying troops are polite, not to say courtly They pay for everything.

Now follow closely. They pay with special money, all printed up in the home country for the occasion. The shopkeeper who sells a pair of silk stockings to a trooper is paid in this special money—let's call 'em blitz-dollars.

But the invaded country is still using its old traditional money. People will take blitz-dollars from the invaders, but not from each other. So the merchant takes his accumulated blitz-dollars to tthe national bank of his country, and says, here I want old-fashioned money for these. The bank obliges, because it must, at a rate of exchange set by the conquerors.

Now watch more closely. The silk stockings, which are goods and therefore valuable, have gone off to the country of the invader. All that the invaded country has to show for them is certain printed slips, faset accumulating in the national bank. If the invaded country is to get anything valuable back for the silk stockings, these blitz-dollars must be capable of being exchanged for other goods.

But they aren't, except in the invading country. So, to get anything back at all for the goods bought and shipped away for blitz-dollars, the invaded country must buy something from the invader with them.

The invader then offers to take back his blitz-dollars for exactly whatever goods he chooses to dump on the invaded country at exactly whatever prices he chooses to charge. The invaded victim has no choice.

It isn't business. It isn't quite stealing in the manner of old-time conquerors riding off with loot at the saddle-bow. Just what it is we scarcely know. But France, and Norway, and Belgium and Poland are finding out.

Synthetic Fiber Bathing Suits Latest on Beach

In this age of synthetic fabrics, it remains for the old timers to recall when our clothing was made chiefly of cotton and wool.

Clothing from trees, where Adam got his first suit of leaves with two pair of branches, may soon be in fashion. ibers resembling silk can be spun from the filaments of a new liquid wood, made of pulp with hydrogen added.

If cost prove in line with other fabrics, a wood clothing industry may be born. In winter emergencies, then, man can give the shirt off his back to keep the furnace fire going.

Knitted bathing suits, made from a synthetic vinyl resin fiber, are appearing on the beaches. The material is elastic, equally strong wet or dry, and is proofed against water, acids or alkalies. Fish lines, nets and seines, shower curtains and waterproof clothing are also made of the fabric.

Shrinkproof Nylon is making its appearance as an improvement over the original fabric being used for women's hosiery. Future uses for the product will probably be found in parachutes, lace, upholstery, men's suit linings and hose, knit goods, woven dress materials, rugs and carpets.

Neckties of glass or rubber provide something new in an old gift-for-men standby. Soft as silk(but strong as steel, the glass fiber neckties are stain-proof, burn-proof, fade-proof, and wrinkle proof, and come in 45 different color combinations.

This same fabric is being used for table linens, lampshades, tablecloths, bedspreads and a variety of household articles. For the outside of the house, there are colorful glass fiber awnings, easily kept clean by turning the hose on them.

The new rubber sheeting, pliofilm, is being tested for use as neckwear material that would be easy to keep clean. Now found at ribbon counters in a variety of widths and colors, pliofil may soon be used to make belts, hats, shoes, handbags and household furnishings.

Competition for silk from still another fabric is found in the full fashioned lisle stocking of sheer cotton mesh now developed by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

CHICAGO — Temperatures are torrid, and so is the American League pennant chase, but these facts notwithstanding football already is very much in the air for the professional.

Three of the clubs have started preliminary preparations for games in which the champion Green Bay Packers are to engage the College All-Star at Soldiers' Field, Chicago, Aug. 29, and the New York Giants deploy against Eastern All-Stars at the Polo Grounds, Sept. 4, while the Rams are hooking up with the Midwest All-Stars in Cleveland's Municipal Stadium.

Aug. 14 will find all 10 National League clubs at work . . . all close to home except the Washington Redskins, who are to train as far away as Spokane

"Heat or no heat," says Dutch Clark, "we've got to get out there and dig. And maybe the heat is a good thing," the coach of the Cleveland outfit adds. "It'll help pare excess poundage from some of the boys who neglected to keep in shape this summer."

Clark, famous back and the youngest drillmaster in the circuit, now in his second season as head man of the Rams, looks for the biggest year in the history of the pro game.

"Everything should be improved," he claims. "From balance of power to spectator interest."

Champion Has Yet to Repeat In National

Tradition says champions never repeat, but what is even more significant for the defending Green Bay Packers is the material side of the picture. Every team in the circuit should be improved by the addition of brilliant rookies.

Clark's choice is the Chicago Bears.

"They had a terrific club last year with a lot of youngsters showing the way," he explains. "Bill Osmanski, Billy Patterson and Sid Luckman have all the fire of college kids.

"They've bolstered an already great line with Ken Kavanaugh, the pass receiver from Louisiana State; Tackle Ed Koleman from Temple; Cloyde Turner, star center from Hardin-Simmons, and Lee Artoe, a big tackle from California."

Clark also has a liking for the New York Giants, who come up with Grenville Lansdell of Southern California and Kay Eakin of Arkansas, outstanding college triple threat last year.

The champion Packers still pack a potent aerial game with Cecil Isbell throwing and Don Hutson catching. Amby Schindler, U. S. C.'s triple-threat, and Hal Van Every of Minnesota have been added to the backfield.

Sutherland Could Use Kinnick And McFadden

With Parker Hall, new aerial king of the circuit, sparking the drive, Clark looks for his Rams to stir up a barrel of trouble.

"We've also got Ollie Cordill of Rice coming up," he explains. "He should go places. He's much better than Ernie Lain, his highly-regarded teammate."

Three from U. S. C.—Ends Bill Fisk and Bob Winslow, and All-America Guard Harry Smith—bolster the Detroit Lions, under new ownership and once more commanded by Potsy Clark.

Jimmy Conzelman, formerly of Washington University at St. Louis is one of two new coaches, and is trying to rebuild the Chicago Cardinals without too much material.

Dr. Jock Sutherland of Pittsburgh renown is the other new strategist, but his Brooklyn Dodgers would be a lot better off if Nile Kinnick of Iowa and Bunks McFadden of Clemson would come to terms and if Ace Parker hadn't broken a leg in basketball.

Washington picked Joe Boyd, Texas A. & M. tackle, as its prize first-year plum.

Dutch Clark doesn't look for either the Pittsburgh Steelers or Philadelphia to be much of a pennant contender, but figures the Eagles should be greatly improved now that Davey O'Brien has a year's professional experience.

Fashion Woman Tells of Flight

Reporter Tells of 4 Days in a Coal Boat

My Dear:

After two weeks, we are beginning to feel like human beings again. Those last days in France were terrible—so was our journey over to England—and it still all seems like a very bad nightmare. I cannot yet believe that we have definitely left everything behind.

While Paris fell, it became evident that no Britisher could remain with any safety in France, even in the then-unoccupied territory around Bordeaux. At that time I thought I could stay on and see how things would turn out. It was then that I persuaded Bill (Mrs. Hargrove's husband—a British citizen) and Charles (the Hargrove's 17-year-old son) to go to England, leaving Nicole (their 13-year-old daughter) with me. We had taken a small house, and with friends close by, I was prepared to carry on.

Embarkation in Rain and Confusion

To cut a long story short, the men left on a Wednesday and it was not until the following Monday that, on the spur of the moment, I decided to leave France. Unfortunately I had to leave my mother behind and naturally since then I have had no communication whatever from her. You can imagine how worried I am.

An American friend drove me from Bordeaux to Mayonne. On arrival there we found that there were no boats for England from that port (the British consul had left), but we were informed that a boat—the very last for England—was due to sail that night from St. Jean de Luz. We made for St. Jean right away and arrived there around five in the afternoon. It was pouring rain, and even hailing, and we waited on the jetty without any shelter, until it was almost dark. We were then informed by some Briish naval officers who were in charge of embarkation that they could not take us on that night—it was too rough out in the roads.

So we were marched off to the nearby railway station, there to await the dawn. No food and no means of getting any, and no place to sit. I forgot to say that the scene on the jetty was one of utmost confusion. Around eight hundred Polish soldiers had arrived that same afternoon in lories, also a number of civilians—all waiting to go to England.

To enhance the misery, we were given all sort of contradictory orders. First we were told "no luggage." Then "only one suitcase," until finally we managed to take on two pieces of luggage each.

We were still drenched when we returned to the pier the following morning, as soon as it was light, and it rained some more. Then about 9 a. m. we saw signs of embarkation, and before we knew, Nicole and I were shipped into the first fishing boat that was to take us to the ship. Outside, the sea was rough——waves mountain high—and it looked as though we would never be able to get anywhere near the ship. My heart sank somewhat when I caught sight of it—a dirty collier—and the Basque fishermen were gesticulating wildly and shouting they were risking not only our lives but their own, in trying to embark us. After circling the ship four times, they finally made fast and then started hoisting us up with a rope.

Women, Babies, Dogs, and a Canary

Those four days and four nights in the hold of the collier made an experience I am not likely to forget. We were herded there with about 30 English-speaking people, the rest Poles, Czechs and a smattering of other nationalities—about 300 women in all, as well as babies, dogs, and a canry! No food—we were given tea twice a day—and practically no light.

The first 24 hours were horrible. It was terribly rough and the ship pitched and tossed, with tremendous waves breaking over the ship's sides. Down in the hold, they sounded like great guns.

The second day out, the sun shone and we ventured on deck. By that time, we had only a precious bit of cold water to wash our hands in. It was no use trying to keep clean.

We arrived off the coast of England the fifth day at day-break but not until the following morning at five o'clock did we get to London and to the first bath in almost six days.

Both Nicole and I were stunned with fatigue and aching in every bone. She was marvelous all along. Took it all very philosophically and never grumbled. I don't know what I would have done without her.

And so here we are. Very happy to be all together and ready to face the future, whatever that may mean.

I am, as always,
Rosette.

Travelers Hit Hard to Win

Little Rock Finally Wins From Memphis 11-7

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Knocking the ball all over Russwood park from the first through the ninth innings, the lowly Little Rock Travelers smacked Memphis pitching for 18 hits and an 11-to-7 victory Wednesday night, to squared the series.

A commanding lead early in the game served the Travelers in good stead as the Chicks counted three each in the sixth and seventh after making their first in the third. Little Rock added to its majority in the late innings.

Neither of the starting pitchers finished. John Gaddy went out for a pinch-hitter in the sixth and Joe Kohlman finished for the Chicks. Hank Harris, credited with the win, was knocked out in the seventh. Cotton Brazle relieved after two were out and yielded only one hit to the end.

The clubs end the series Thursday night.

War a Bother Say Children

British Children in U. S. Maintain Dignity

By TOM WOLF
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

NNEW YORK — A week-long ocean voyage, all alone, to a strange land, is hard under the most favorable circumstances. For war's children it is stupendous. Because of this, the hostesses of the Travelers Aid Society, assigned by the American committee for the Care of European Children to meet the young refugees, are doubly impressed with their dignity and poise on arrival.

Take tiny, 6-year-old Daphne. Her smiling eyes and curly hair made her a center of attraction for photographers and reporters the moment she measuredly stepped off her ship. Patient and poised, she answered everything.

"We ask you these questions," a paternal reporter put in, "because American children are interested in British children. I hope you don't mind."

"Not at all," chirped Daphne brightly. "It's ever so kind of you, I'm sure."

Daphne's father is in the R. A. F. She'll stay with friends in West Virginia "for the duration."

The precocious maturity of even the tots has given reporters endless amusement. Little Wendy is only 4. Her father was killed in the Flanders pocket. She's bound for the home of complete strangers in Colorado. At the pier she heard a fellow passenger complain of the long waiting necessary to get through customs. Up piped the 4-year-old in confirmation. "Endless," she said, "perfectly endless."

None of the children have forgotten the war. Many refuse to part with their gas masks even after arrival. A befuddled maid discovered Diana, age 5, on her first night in New York climbing to the sill of an open window, pulling down the shade. "One can't be too careful," Diana insisted. "The Jerries are likely to fly over any moment and see our light."

Six-year-old Robin was on his way to the Texas home of a former A. E. F. captain who was billeted in a small French town with Robin's grand father in the first World War. Robin had lost all his baggage and personal belongings on the complicated voyage from England. With great solemnity and complete mastery of British understatement, young Master Robin commented: "This war is a bit of a bother, you know."

Germany and Russia have occupied all or part of 13 nations since last September.

Virta Warrens Is Speed Ace

Ex-Salvation Army Lass Is Midget Auto Ace

By HOLLIS GOODRICH, Jr.
AP eature Service

PORTLAND, Ore. — Pretty Vita Warrens, 27-year-old former "Miss Portland," agrees that the woman's place is in the home, but home to her is behind the wheel of a racing automobile.

The brown-eyed darling of Pacific Northwest race tracks discarded her beauty contest bathing suit three years ago for a pair of overalls, a helmet and goggles.

She has walked home from a ride only once and that was two years ago when—irked by a driver's remark that she was taking it too slowly—she pressed the throttle to the floorboard, failed to negotiate a turn and trashed through a fence.

Miss Portland in '30

The diminutive driver—she stands only five feet, two inches and weighs slightly over 100 pounds—enjoys the dizzy whirls around the speedway but tells adventurous young girls that driving "is inadvisable as a career."

She had been out of the Salvation Army's ranks only a short time when the judges selected her "Miss Portland of 1930." She is "still in love with the army" but only smiles when asked to tell more about falling in love with the picture of a Salvation Army captain when she was eight years old.

Nothing in her childhood pointed to a career as an automobile racing driver unless it would be the city of her birth, Garwood, Mo. But she says the town was not named after Gar Wood, the famed racing pilot.

She moved to the west coast as a child. Her teachers will tell you that she excellent as a public speaker and was a finalist in a state oratorical tournament.

Automobiles began occupying her time in 1930. A friend, who later became her husband, operated a repair shop and she spent many hours watching him work. Occasionally she took a wrench and assisted. Now she can take a car apart and reassemble it.

Started Racing in '37

Her racing career started at the Portland speedway in 1937. Since that time she has driven "match races" in Vancouver, B. C., and Salem, Ore. She recently finished eighth in a grueling 135-mile stock car race, beating out several men drivers.

Her chief ambition now is to play the piano well, but between serving as distributor for a light car company, managing a home and keeping her automobiles in shape, she hasn't much time to further her musical ambition.

As for women drivers, she is quick to defend them, explaining that there are "some bad ones," but adding that "I've seen a lot of incompetent men drivers, too."

To women drivers she offers the following advice:

"Have confidence in your driving; relax at the wheel Forget that your husband owns the car and that you might have to account to him for any damages. Do as he does and blame the other fellow."

The longest way 'round is the shortest way home for Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Neave of London. German invasion of Norway left them stranded in the war zone, only a normally short voyage from England. They fled to Stockholm, Sweden, traveled across Russia and the Pacific. lay in filling the jobs at its disposal.

Noe followers have been complaining that in the 50-50 job split the good jobs are going to Jones people and the poor ones to the Noe crowd. Another complaint is that in some parishes the Jones leaders have simply ignored the agreement.

Another complication comes in because of the special arrangement that had to be made in New Orleans. There the city organization—the 'old regulars" so-called—has made its peace with the victors, and a three-way split is being work out.

Noe has had to run up to Baton Rouge for numerous patronage conferences with the governor. Both men emerge from these conferences smiling; after the last one, Noe came out happy and insisted there was going to be no trouble in keeping the agreement. But what happened to him immediately after that conference is the tip-off on the kind of pressure both men are under.

Jones Isn't Used to It

Noe went back to his suite in a Baton Rouge hotel, and was immediately buried under a mas sof office-seekers. Eight or 10 men swarmed into his inner room, waiting their turns to present their claims personally. A second room was jammed to the boiling point with hungry folk trying to get past the inner door. And the corridor leading to the suite was so full you had to use your elbows to get through.

Noe saw all of them, eventually, but it kept him busy. In the midst of the swirl, which would have driven an ordinary man frantic, he turned to me, grinned, and cried, 'How'd you like to be a politician?" Later, he remarked: "I've got an oil business up in Monroe, but the Lord knows when I'll get up to look after it."

So heavy has the crush grown that when he is home callers insist on getting in to see him late at night—once, recently, on a night when his small son was seriously ill, the most earnest pleadings of his staff could not keep the jobseekers out.

All of which is worth recounting, because this job-hunger is something neither Noe nor Jones can get away from. Noe can take it; he is used to it, he enjoys people, and he is the physically tough, buoyant kind who can stand anything. But Jones isn't used to it, and his health isn't too sound.

And if the whole business seems out of place in a reform governor has got to learn how to handle. Generally, they don't learn, and their careers end in failure; the next couple of months will tell whether Jones can satisfy the placeseekers and the political henchmen and still go through with the big job of re-establishing clean, efficient government in Louisiana.

Went to Bat on Law Repeal

One of Noe's biggest services to Jones was rendered after the election was over and Jones had won.

Like many other states, Louisiana has a law which permits the attorney general to supersede a local district attorney with a special prosecutor, if he has reason to think the local official isn't going to bear down on every pitch. Before the new administration took office, Gov. Earl Long called a special session of the legislature to repeal this law.

He'd probably have made it if it hadn't been for Jimmy Noe. Noe was on deck in Baton Rouge immediately. He circulated among the incoming legislators—redfaced, grinning, persuasive. Result: most of them simply stayed in the hotel instead of going up to the capitol, and the special session had to be called off for lack of a quorum.

Bullfight Fans Hail Girl, 18

Conchita Cintron Is Popular in He-Man Art

By BEN MEYER
AP Feature Service

MEXICO CITY — Conchita Cintron, at 18 an international figure in the he-man art of bullfighting, has calmly put to death 88 charging bulls but confesses that "I couldn't kill a fly if I had to."

Bullfighting a cruel sport? No, says Miss Cintron, "For those who have Spanish blood, it is something different."

Miss Cintron is an almost timid girl, unspoiled by the adoration of crowds which throng the Mexico City bullring, 25,000 at a time, to cheer "la bonita peruviana."

Although Miss Cintron is a United States citizen, born of American citizens, the Latins call her a "peruviana" because she spent most of her years in Lima, Peru. Her father, Frank Cintron, a gradute of West Point Military Academy, is in business there. The Latins find it difficult to believe that a woman can be an expert bullfighter and have even more trouble realizing that the daring girl who gets their "vivas" is an American.

No Qualms

About the actual business of killing bulls, Conchita says:

"I have never had any qualms about it. A qualm or a cringe before 1,200 pounds of enraged bull would be sure death. Anyhow, the bull to a certain extent commits suicide when he charges. There is a little spot just forward of the shoulders which is not exposed to the matador's sword unless the bull is charging.

"No, it doesn't take great strength to kill a bull. It does take a keen eye, a steady nerve and a true hand. But if the sword strikes the proper spot, it penetrates easily."

Blue-eyed Conchita, 5 feet 5, weight 110, is a rare article in bullfighting circles. There are two types of fighting. The Portugese style calls for horsemanship, courage and ability at placing long, barbed darts, or banderillas, just behind the shoulders of the bull. The fighter works from horseback. The Spanish style bullfighter, or matador, kills the bull while standing on the ground. Miss Cintron does both. Few others do.

The arena and training for it take most of her waking hours. With the aid of her long-time friend, Ruy da Camara, Portuguese consul in Lima, she buys horses and trains them for their task.

Furebred horses do poorly in bullfights because they are too temperamental. It takes about nine months to develop the horse's, muscles, to increase his power, to fatten and condition him, and to train him for his work. Power is necessary. A horse's ability to rise from a fall on one foot often means the difference between his well-being and an injury."

Started at 13

When she was 11, Conchita received as a birthday present a series of riding lessons from Mr. Da Camara in Lima. At 13, she engaged in her first bullfight, Portuguese style, at a charity affair in Lima. In the same year Da Camara, in Portugal on business, cabled his protege to come there for a bullfight. She won acclaim in Lisbon where women bullfighters were then practically unknown. Two years ago, July 28, she killed her first bull at Tarma, Peru. Last year on the same day she came to Mexico, and on July 28, 1940, she had her 40th bullfight in Mexico. (Two bulls were killed in each fight, by each matador).

In the one-year period she won acclaim of Mexicans, ever skeptical about the horsemanship, and particularly the bullfighting ability, of women.

Da Camara, in his day one of the world's most famous Portuguese style bullfighters, helps Conchita train and condition the horses.

There are three categories of bullfighters above the novilleros, or novices. In the first class are Mexico's performers, who get from $2,000 up for each afternoon's performance. The second category includes near-ace performers, who draw from $1,000 to $2,000. Miss Cintron is in this group. The third class performers get from $200 to $1,000.

No Parental Objections

Conchita's father is now in Lima and her mother visiting in Hollywood. She lives with Senor and Senora Da Camara. Miss Cintron's parents do not object to her bullfighting. "Father loves it, and fortunately I have a mother who permits me to do what I like to do."

She says she "never had a date in my life. First, there isn't time, and second, my parents, and my substitute parents, the Da Camaras, are old-fashioned about such things. I never have time to think about beaux. There are not many more years I shall be able to fight bulls, and there is plenty of time to look for beaux afterward. I shall perhaps continue bullfighting for two years more. Some how it doesn't appeal to me, as I feel about it now, to fight bulls after I am a grown woman."

Aircraft Guns

since 1917, would sweep the skies of many planes in any future war.

Legends were biult up about the ability of the guns, firing automatically, to score direct hits on targets traveling more than 200 miles per hour.

German officers wrote articles for military journals in which they said in all sincerity that any airplane which attempted to pass the ring of AA guns surrounding Berlin, Hamburg, Essen and other points would be annihilated.

France circled Paris with anti-aircraft batteries, complete with searchlights and sound detectors, and felt secure against air attack. Britain scattered AA guns around the country side in September and waited .

Only Seven Nazi Planes Downed

Eventually German bombers roared over Paris and London, British planes calmly flew over Berlin. Anti-aircraft fire proved ineffective.

And thus far in the defense of England, of the 200 bombers which have been brought down, anti-aircraft fire has accounted for only—seven—all during the month of July.

Despite this record, AA guns will play an increasingly important part in Britain's defense. For German pilots, bombing during July with a greater intensity as the invasion of England entered its first stage, know that direct hits on docks, factories, and air-fields can only be scored by low, diving attacks.

Planes, like AA guns, can hit what they can see. But both must have their target well spotted.

One big lesson British AA strategists have learned is that a defended zone must be literally ringed with guns. Surrounding a city or air field with a few is no good. A screen of shells, completely covering an area and exploding covering an area and exploding up to 15-000-foot altitudes, is the only real anti-aircraft defense. London is probably the safest city in England from this viewpoint.

For every square yard of sky over the city is covered either with an anti-aircraft gun or a balloon.

The pom-pom, the Swedish Bofors, the machine gun, the three-inch, the 3.7 and the 4.5 are the guns of England's anti-aircraft defense.

Of these the multiple-barrel pom-pom has proved the most effective in actual battle. Strictly a naval weapon, the pom-pom has time and again scored direct hits on dive bombers, a vulnerable as they roared in a screaming straight dive at a convoy ship.

In Spain and on the Western Front the Swedish Bofors AA gun received lavish praise. But it still remains a question mark under actual battle in England.

The machine gun, as in 1917, is still king of the battlefield against infantry attack. But as a defense against low-flying airplanes it is ineffective. Its cone of fire is too small.

A battalion of marching soliders is more effective than machine gun fire against a hedg-hopping airplane. It was demonstrated in Spain, Finland and the Low Countries that a group of soldiers firing rifles into the air can bring a plane down quicker because their fire covers a wider area.

The three-inch, the 3.7 and the 4.5, Big Berthas of the AA defense, toss fragmentation shells to heights of 20,000, 30,000 and 40,000 feet. But like all modern AA guns the world over, their accuracy is negligible above 15,00 feet.
